

Hi SpringSummer

Dear SpringSummer,

I am a 21 year old boy from Aarhus, living in Copenhagen, who wishes to use my skills at a small and agile team like yours.

In my previous job at a tech startup focused on ecommerce stores, I not only gained insight into, but actively worked with how ecommerce stores work and operate. In addition, I actively worked with UX, user research and creating product specifications to understand how our software was perceived and how it could work better.

In addition, I will be starting at ITU in September to study software development, where April and May will be spent studying Maths A from 08:30-11:45.

But to be honest, I'm just really eager to learn.

I just wish for three simple things: to create something new, to be creative, to learn - preferably in programming and a little design, which is why I'm writing to you.

I'm still very unskilled and I generally know very little, but on the other hand, I can promise a fire, lightning and thunder of commitment on my part. I am therefore also more than willing to work for free for the first month, so you can take a look at me and assess whether it makes sense for you to continue. I have no doubt that my skills can be utilised to help build e-commerce sites, websites or apps - I have experience in all three areas from my time at Custimy and Make Influence. Two weeks ago I had never written any code that wasn't part of a tutorial before, but I learnt how to code a website from scratch, create a design, host the site among others.

By the way, you can click around the site to read more about me.

So, could you use a good dose of 'jysk' young gun, with lots of drive and a large dose of commitment?

Then don't hesitate to give me a call or shoot me an email,

I'm up for a coffee no matter what.

I look forward to hearing from you.
